Nichole Gourley, the mother of John T. "Jack" McCain, sued to prevent U.S. marshals from seizing her home after her son was accused of leading the July 10 rampage, which included shots fired at law enforcement officials. The marshals served her with a seizure notice, and Gourley did not dispute the amount. But she said she was not given the required notice prior to that action. Gourley said she does not have the money to pay, and noted her family is now homeless as a result of the order. "I am asking for help in getting home," she wrote in a filing late last month. McCain was killed at the end of the rampage, which included 12 attacks on banks, police stations, pizza joints, gas stations and a Wal-Mart in the town of Corbin. He was later ruled to have committed suicide. Many of the attacks

It is desirable in that it allows a computer to store a large amount of information such as data files, software programs and the like. Generally, in a computer there is a certain type of memory that is loaded first and that occupies a certain memory space. This type of memory is known as a "primary storage." Another type of memory is known as a "secondary storage." This type of memory is generally relatively slower and larger than the primary storage, but has more memory capacity. Secondary storage may be used for data that is constantly being used or used for a relatively long period of time, for example, data in a database. One type of computer program is known as a "batch" program. A batch program does not require continuous attention from the user, and is typically used to perform repetitive operations such as compiling a database, sorting or storing information. Generally, batch programs are programs that are designed to be run without the attention of the user from a certain number of days to a certain number of years. One type of typical batch program is a "job," which is a collection of operations to be performed. In a job, operations are arranged sequentially and submitted to the computer system. The computer system is not required to perform the job until the entire job has been submitted. When all operations in a batch job are completed, a "job completion flag" is set to indicate completion of the job. Other types of batch programs are "scripts" and "scripts which provide a user with the option of submitting the script to the computer system without providing a complete list of operation. The computer system stores the job in a secondary storage, also known as a computer's "cache." The job may also be stored in a database. Another type of computer program is known as a "database program." Examples of database programs are interactive query language (IQL), relational database management systems (RDBMS), and object oriented database management systems (OODBMS). Database programs are designed to manage data and other information. These types of computer programs are often used to
